

Here are a series of questions to explore in this week's tutorial:

1. What is a flawed argument?
2. Why could an argument be flawed?
3. Give an example of flawed reasoning.
4. Why is analysing arguments for flaws an important part of any research process?
5. What three factors does Cottrell (2017) encourage to support effective written and spoken communication? Which factor do you think is most important?
6. Describe active listening. Why is active listening a key skill to develop when involved in a group project?
7. What progress have you made on your group project both individually and collectively?