

Here are a series of questions to explore in this week's tutorial:

1. Name one type of non-argument and explain it. Why is it important to be to distinguish argument from non-argument?
2. Which type of argument is most similar to an argument? Which one is least similar? (TIP: Remember Cottrell's (2017) six aspects of recognising an argument)
3. How have your reading habits changed becoming more of a critical reader?
4. The University of Toronto outlined five factors when comparing everyday reading to critical reading. Name two of the factors and explain the comparison.
5. What did Chatfield (2018) mean by "mapping a landscape of evidence"? Have you tried this?
6. Why is evaluating sources important in your academic studies?
7. Do you have any questions related to the mock exam or final exam?
